

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

20th Annual Summer Camp Fair Returns to the Indiana State Museum

Free community event offers a cure for cabin fever while informing families of the variety of educational summer programs for children.

Indianapolis, IN — One of the nation's largest one-stop summer planning events is back with more than 100 camps and programs for kids 3-18+, entertainment, informative speeches, prizes, mascots, demonstrations, hands-on summer safety instruction and much more.

The Indiana State Museum will be hosting this one day event giving parents the opportunity to gather important information on summer camps and programs as well as provide a fun cure for cabin fever for the whole family.

Examples of participating camps and programs include: Day and residential camps, acting camps, special needs camps, science camps, wilderness and foreign travel camps, arts and crafts programs, gymnastics camps, space camps and sports camps, among many others. Camps are for all ages and abilities. Financial aid is available for most camps and some are free for those who qualify.

This event is free to the public from 10 am to 5 pm on Saturday, February 28, 2009 at the Indiana State Museum, 650 W. Washington St. Indianapolis, Indiana 46204. In addition, free parking will be available (pick up passes at Visitor Services Desk day of event).

Families are encouraged to stop by to meet with representatives, listen in on informative speeches and presentations, meet celebrities and mascots, get free goodies and even register to win dozens of prizes. Also, representatives from the American Camp Association, Indiana and Peyton Manning Children's Hospital at St. Vincent will be on hand to help answer any questions parents and children might have. Grab a bag at the door along with a passport and take your passport to at least 20 camps to stamp then drop off at Radio Disney booth to register for fabulous prizes.

First 100 families get a box of outdoor glow sticks!
